Solution
context.

In a world increasingly dominated by space perception, form experimentation and branding, essential research on spatial flows, fluid forms and complex systems will lead the way into the future design of the living space.

personal approach.

I imagined an organic surface room shaped according to the spatial needs of human comfort. The challenge was to mainly maintain a single surface that shifts its form from necessity into function in order to create a fluid, continuous space.

In this way, a room exhibited as a complex system should be irreducible in such ways, that the overall system will not be detachable in multiple parts. Form should flow and merge within the living spaces, transforming the room into an integral and indivisible system.
