One of the main ideas of the concept is the moving rooms. It is a big leap from the old, static facade of the typical New York building to a new, dynamic building type.

Practically the new hotel is like a living organism, in continuous motion, it becomes an interesting space that directly connects the guest with the people from the street below, and with each other.

The building has two main parts, the rooms and the socialization areas. This two are merged together, to ensure natural social interaction. To attract the locals into visiting the hotel, the ground floor is an open space gallery, with wide openings and with direct access to the socialization areas above.

This way the sidewalk and the building are linked together to ensure an easy access in the hotel. The moving parts of the building help recognize at what floor are the most guests, at any given time.
