If you have eaten sushi you probably experienced the conveyor belt that carries the sushi plates around the counter. Kaiten-zushi, known in English as "Conveyor Belt Sushi," is a type of sushi restaurant where plates of food are placed on a conveyor belt so that they can circle the entire restaurant. This type of dining was started by Yoshiaki Shiraishi in Osaka, Japan, in 1958. It quickly became a popular place for Japanese dining.

My idea is to replace the belt system with water flow; water propellent devices, powered by solar cells, activates the system and all the dishes and drinks, on floating server plates(see the details), starts to
